therapy and colorectal cancer risk: a systematic review and meta-analysis. Evidence on the association of lipid-lowering therapy and colorectal cancer (CRC) is inconsistent. This systematic review and meta-analysis aimed to evaluate the association of lipid-lowering therapies with CRC incidence and mortality. Published cohort studies were identified by electronic database searches and hand searches from 1966 through September 2013. The primary analysis was a random-effects meta-analysis of prospective cohort studies of post-diagnosis CRC. We performed subgroup and meta-regression analyses to examine heterogeneity and study-level risk of bias. Forty-one cohort studies involving 1,233,238 participants were identified. A significant reduction in the risk of CRC was seen in individuals receiving statin use [relative risk (RR) = 0.89; 95% confidence interval (CI): 0.85-0.93; P
